

The Conference

This autumn conference, held once again with the active support of SCC Heritage Conservation Team, continues the Research Framework process. Following the 2001 Conference Archaeology in Surrey in the 21st century and the subsequent publication of Aspects of Archaeology and History in Surrey in 2004, the Surrey Research Framework was launched in 2006. Since then, special interest groups of the Society and others have used it as a basis for the development of further research. It has always been intended that the Framework should continue to evolve. The conference will examine ways in which that is happening and invite further involvement in the process.

This year's conference takes a look at local history and the contribution it makes to understanding settlement development, especially in association with archaeological evidence

The Society

The Surrey Archaeological Society was founded in 1854 for the investigation of the history and antiquities of the ancient county of Surrey. It has an extensive library in Guildford, and organises lectures, visits, excavation, fieldwork and conservation. It facilitates the publication of the results of research through its Bulletin and The Collections.
